

Pathways to Country

Celebrating a living culture

Aboriginal people have an intangible connection between people and landscape, woven through stories passed down through generations, holding a unique and important knowledge. The connection between people and country is a pathway that transports ancient knowledge of landscape, to the people of today.

The Pathways to Country program seeks to unearth and renew old pathways to reconnect people with country and facilitate a greater connection between Aboriginal people and land managers in the Western Local Land Services region of NSW.

Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal people have shared ambitions, this program has a number of strategies for us to help realise these and move forward together. These strategies include:

- protection of sensitive and significant sites on private land
- recording of traditional ecological knowledge and land management techniques
- creating opportunities to share cultural stories and knowledge.

This program recognises that:

- Aboriginal cultural heritage is intrinsically linked to the landscape, traditions and culture of Western NSW, and that there is a need to work with the broader community to understand, value and protect important cultural assets.
- Land managers often have long, multi-generational periods of tenure on properties in Western NSW, and recognise and protect the cultural heritage values on their land, but may have limited knowledge of how to identify Aboriginal cultural heritage, and the best techniques for protecting such values.

- Aboriginal communities also have long standing associations with Western NSW landscapes, and key people, particularly Elders within the community have knowledge of where important sites exist and where cultural heritage values need consideration. They also have insights into traditional land management practices which may be valuable to consider in making management decisions.
- There can be a degree of uncertainty and mistrust between land managers and Aboriginal communities. This can be for a range of reasons, such as misunderstanding or misinformation with respect to native title. This misinterpretation could be due to the fact that few clear pathways between the communities exist to share knowledge, values and understanding, and to create relationships.

By working together through this program, we will build pathways to stronger relationships over values that we all share, increase our knowledge, and protect things that are important for many future generations.

Strategic themes

Protecting sensitive and significant sites on private land

Are you a landholder who has, or think you have, a significant site or artefact on your property? Or are you an Aboriginal community member who has knowledge of sites but no contact with the land manager? Western Local Land Services can facilitate a discrete way in which parties can communicate, sites can be assessed, identified and even protected.

Factors to be considered include:

- the cultural nature and significance of the site
- physical threats
- protection methods
- costs
- partnering with local communities and traditional owners to protect the site.

Sharing and recording of traditional ecological knowledge and land management techniques

When land management techniques are discussed between landholders and traditional owners, new knowledge may emerge about land management and cultural values. Western Local Land Services can facilitate the recording and utilisation of this information in the most appropriate way, by:

- recording land management information in databases
- trialling traditional land management techniques on private land (e.g cultural burning)
- mapping of traditional ecological knowledge and land use (e.g medicine plants)
- developing materials to share information (e.g brochure, short film).

Creating opportunities to share cultural stories and knowledge

The Pathways to Country program will create opportunities for local Aboriginal community members and land managers to share knowledge of personal histories and stories relating to the Aboriginal cultural history of the landscape.

This includes:

- dreaming and creation stories
- traditional foods and water sources
- songlines and landscape interpretation
- histories of Aboriginal stockmen and pastoral relationships
- understanding kinship traditional boundaries.

Five step process

1. Talk to us - confidentially

The first step is to have a confidential conversation with Western Local Land Services about it. We can discuss on the phone or visit the property. This conversation is private and there is no requirement to share any specific information.

2. Make an assessment

If the landholder wants to go further, the next step is to confirm what the proposed site or activity is. Western Local Land Services will arrange to talk with someone who holds knowledge of the sites, traditional practice, or stories such as a qualified staff member, landholder, traditional owner or custodian of the landscape the property is in.

3. Plan together

For landholders that wish to go on to protect sites, capture knowledge or share stories, Western Local Land Services will assist in developing a plan of action or proposal which will then be considered for funding.

4. Make it happen

If the project has been prioritised, Western Local Land Services will develop a contract directly with the proponent or assist in engaging a suitable contractor, in consultation with the landholder, to undertake the project.

5. Share the story

Western Local Land Services can help facilitate an event with landholders and key traditional owners, to share knowledge and share stories, and also celebrate and acknowledge successes.

For our future philanthropic, agency and organisational funding partners and contributors

As a regional NSW government agency with a diverse and engaged local Board and wide range of active Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal advisors to our organisation, Western Local Land Services has a unique opportunity to facilitate the development of stronger relationships between Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal land managers in the Western Local Land Services region.

We also believe this will lead to better outcomes for managing country, more opportunities for Aboriginal businesses to work alongside and partner with all land managers in the region, and more opportunity for diversification of income streams on properties in the Western region.

Our actions are limited by the budgetary framework we operate in, but we believe in the power of strong partnerships and would welcome a discussion with you about this.

Please make contact with us to discuss partnership opportunities:
